Probation, Confirmation & Notice Period Policy

How probation works at Emids, the 30-60-90 goals, what confirmation requires, and how notice periods apply to both sides.

Every new employee joins with a defined probation period — normally six months, or as stated in your offer letter. Probation is not a holding pen: it is where structured goals, honest feedback and support come together to make early employment work.

1. During probation

- In week one you agree 30-60-90 day goals with your manager; they are recorded and referred to at each checkpoint.
- Checkpoints run at 30, 60 and 90 days — 30 minutes each, focused on progress, blockers and coaching.
- Leave accrues during probation; annual and casual leave are availed only with manager approval.
- Probation-chartered employees carry client and policy obligations identically to confirmed employees.

2. What confirmation requires

Two things in combination: the rated outcome of your goal checkpoints, and behavioural evidence of the values in the code of conduct. Confirmation is proposed by your manager, reviewed by HR and signed off by the business-unit head around the month prior to your probation end date.

3. When things are not on track

If performance or conduct falls short, probation may be extended once by up to three months with a written improvement plan: clear gaps, support offered, measurable checkpoints. A decision to exit is made before an extension — not after a second failed cycle.

4. Notice periods

Status	Resignation notice	Company notice
On probation	15 days	15 days
Confirmed (≤ 5 years tenure)	60 days	60 days
Confirmed (> 5 years / leadership)	90 days	90 days

Notice starts on the date your resignation is acknowledged in the HR system, not the day you first tell your manager. The company may waive, shorten or pay in lieu of notice; your exit obligations (handover and asset return) do not shrink with it.

5. During notice

- Leave balance may be availed only with manager approval; notice does not extend while on leave unless agreed in writing.
- Absorption interviews and onboarding elsewhere in the company go ahead as normal while you are on notice within Emids.
- Knowledge-transfer signoff is a gate for your final records.
